INFO

Kadavar have undergone a significant transformation since their formation in 2010. From credible representatives of retroesque, psychedelic stoner rock, which always thrived on the contemporary coolness of Berlin, the city where the two founding members Lupus Lindemann and Tiger Bartelt met in the noughties, they soon went out into the big wide world, where they not only presented their musical idea, but also found new inspiration. While Kadavar initially sounded like the past, their sound became more contemporary over the years in the experience machine of extensive touring, crossing genre boundaries. A success story in many respects. Music as a changing, universal language - that is what Kadavar know how to speak. In the process, they have built up a steadily growing fan base that worships their heroes and follows their every artistic step on five continents and has been instrumental in making Kadavar such an institution.

THROBBING GRISTLE

Live at the Volksbühne, Berlin,
New Year's Eve, 2005

Street Date: 5/16/2025

Throbbing Gristle release Live at the Volksbühne, Berlin, New Year's Eve, 2005, via Mute. Available on double black vinyl and CD.

Previously featured in the TG Berlin box set—which sold out in less than a month—this release captures Throbbing Gristle's unforgettable New Year's Eve performance, part of a specially curated series of live events at Berlin's Volksbühne in 2005 and 2006. The setlist included a preview of five tracks from their first album in 27 years, Part Two: The Endless Not—which was released several years later. Fans were also treated to TG's first encore in 25/26 years, which included iconic songs like 'Convincing People', 'Slug Bait', and 'Hamburger Lady'—what an encore!

Formed in 1975, Throbbing Gristle - Chris Carter, Cosey Fanni Tutti, Genesis Breyer P-Orridge (1950-2020) and Peter 'Sleazy' Christopherson (1955-2010), fully delivered on punk's failed promise to explore extreme culture as a way of sabotaging systems of control. Their impact on music, culture and the arts has been immeasurable, and still felt today across music, film, theatre, and fine art.

For fans of: Bon Iver, J Dilla, Elliot Smith, Burial lavender, an emerging producer duo, explores the question: What if Bon Iver were produced by J Dilla?

Meet lavender. This winsome duo, consisting of Oskar Rice and Adam Jackson. Their output so far has been confined to a debut EP which came out right in the middle of the lockdown and another couple of singles that bring their tally so far to less than thirty minutes of music. But that's about to change with their debut album, we're having a barn dance, a significant step forward and brilliant distillation of all that made those first releases pop so dramatically. This album is the story of one tumultuous year of living, loving (and the falling out thereof). The songwriting is a diary of an eventful 12 months.

"We had a big chat about what this all means to us," explains Oskar, "And we boiled it down to this: it's about love, but not necessarily romantic love. It's about all of those competing emotions and how, if you love one thing, it might detract from loving something else." we're having a barn dance succeeds and surpasses the duo's aims. It's an album that is manifestly ambitious both in its production sound and as songwriters clearly finding greater confidence in their future pathway. As one fan commented on YouTube: "You go. You go and be great. With your lavender." Hear, hear.
